Questions or point of discussion should be addressed to the President who will then either answer directly, or yield to the person giving the report. After all questions are answered and discussions are completed, the President will call for a vote, if necessary. Votes will be counted, both for and against, and will be recorded in the Minutes of the meeting.

The discussion will then be conducted as a debate. Any member, once recognized by the President, may ask a question, and each position will be allowed to answer before the next question is posed.

If, at any time, the meeting becomes argumentative or unproductive, the President may call for an immediate recess. Such recess will be called to allow time to talk with other members informally. After three minutes the President will call the meeting back to order to finish the business at hand.
